BIOGRAPHY

Andrew McLean has been pursuing steep skiing challenges in remote locations for over two decades and has accumulated over 150 first descents. In 2009 he skied the Sultana Ridge on Mt. Foraker, which completed a 14 year project to ski all three of the "Alaska Family" peaks – Foraker, Mt. Hunter and Denali. In 2007 he completed a decade long quest to capture first descents on all seven continents when he traveled to Morocco to ski in the High Atlas Mountains. McLean's specialty is ski mountaineering, which involves climbing up peaks before skiing down them. This process allows him to ski mountains where motorized access is forbidden or impractical. His passion for this sport has led to him being voted as a "Living Legend" by Backcountry Magazine, one of the "Greatest Skiers of Our Time" by Powder Magazine and a featured segment in the Sony Classic Pictures 2007 film entitled "Steep."

Outside of skiing, McLean's interests include design, writing and photography. After graduating from the Rhode Island School of Design, he worked at Black Diamond Equipment for thirteen years, creating products such as the Camelot, wire gate carabiners, Whippet, Peckers and Talon rock hook. His writings and photography have appeared in Skiing, Powder, Backcountry Magazine and numerous outdoor gear catalogs. He lives in Park City, Utah with his wife Polly who holds the world record for the greatest amount of vertical climbed and skied in 24 hours by a female. They have two daughters, Mira and Stella, as well as one happy old dog.
